REMEMBRANCE

Wednesday 11 November 2026

Honouring Service. Remembering Sacrifice.

A lasting tribute to service and sacrifice

Every year on 11 November, people across the United Kingdom pause to remember the servicemen and women who gave their lives in conflict and military operations. Marked by acts of reflection, remembrance services and the two-minute silence, Armistice Day remains one of the nation's most significant occasions of collective remembrance.

This year also marks 110 years since the Battle of the Somme, one of the defining battles of the First World War. The traditions we observe today, from the Cenotaph in Whitehall to local war memorials in communities across the country, are rooted in more than a century of remembrance and gratitude.

To commemorate this important occasion, Royal Mail presents a set of six Special Stamps featuring poignant artworks by British artist Matthew Cook. Inspired by the colours of the red poppy, each stamp captures a different aspect of remembrance, from military service and sacrifice to acts of commemoration that continue to unite generations. Together with a range of thoughtfully designed collectibles, this issue pays tribute to all those who have served and those who continue to be remembered.
